

LIFE AFTER: DIALOGUE

VISION OF THE PROJECT

The purpose of Life after: Dialogue was to stimulate public discourse among a wide audience about the reconstruction and restoration of the war and post-war periods. This was achieved through a multilayered artistic project involving third-generation individuals who lost their homes due to Soviet-Russian aggression. The project focused on those affected in 1986 during the flood by Soviet authorities in the Bakotsky region, and those affected in 2014 and 2022 during Russia's military aggression.

Within a 10-day residency, people who had been forced to move in the past interacted with those currently displaced. They lived together in one village, sharing and exploring each other's stories. Society often overlooks the fact that millions of people have lost their homes and have had to sever ties with the past to adapt to the present. The project aimed to address questions such as whether they would return home, their dreams, and how they envisioned the restoration of their cities.
