VISION OF THE PROJECT

The project planned to organise two educational film camps in Kryvyi Rih and Zaporizhzhia for young people aged 14–21 who wanted to contribute to the preservation and restoration of Ukrainian culture, the development of a strong, European country, and efforts to counter Russian aggression. Among the participants were teenagers who had survived the war or were internally displaced persons (IDPs), as well as young people with hearing impairments.

Divided into subgroups, participants chose culturally significant topics related to their cities and created films addressing these themes.

A joint creative project, a documentary titled "The Country of My Dreams," was produced by all 90 participants. The culmination of the camps was a competition of the films created by the participants, serving as an assessment of the skills acquired during the project and providing an additional incentive for the young filmmakers.

Well-known figures from the fields of culture and art, public figures, teachers, and psychologists were involved in the project, offering mentorship and support. After the completion of the camps, these mentors
